Subject: Registered Nurse Shortage Areas Report

Summary

In 2007, the California Healthcare Workforce Policy Commission (Commission) adopted formal criteria for establishing Registered Nurse Shortage Areas (RNSA). During the June 2020 policy meeting, the Commission voted to revise the methodology using per-capita based calculations and a custom geographic unit of analysis. The Commission also voted to incorporate the degree of shortage into the RNSA designation, categorizing them as high, medium, or low severity areas. The Office of Statewide Health Planning and Development (OSHPD) updated the RNSA designations with the new methodology and the most recently available data. This update designates 58 of 72 custom areas in California as RNSAs, of which the Commission considers 19 to be high-severity, 19 to be medium-severity, and 20 to be low-severity.

OSHPD provides a tool on its website (<https://geo.oshpd.ca.gov/hpsa-search>) that allows stakeholders to lookup whether an address is in an RNSA.

Background and Methodology

The updated methodology calculates a ratio of employed RNs per 100,000 population. OSHPD obtained the number of active RN licenses as of March 2020 from the Department of Consumer Affairs (DCA) licensee lists, employment estimates from regional RN employment estimates published by the Healthforce Center at the University of California San Francisco¹, and population counts from the 2018 American Community Survey 5-year estimates.

The Commission directed OSHPD to designate RNSAs as areas with a ratio below the national 25th percentile. According to the 2018 National Sample Survey of Registered Nurses conducted by the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) the national 25th percentile is 943 employed RNs per 100,000 population. The Commission further instructed OSHPD to divide RNSAs into thirds based on the severity of the shortage.

To improve the ability to pinpoint specific areas of unmet need, the Commission also adopted a custom geography for RNSAs based on the Dartmouth Atlas of Healthcare methodology for hospital service areas. OSHPD staff used California hospital patient-origin data from the California Health and Human Services Agency's Open Data Portal to identify the city where a plurality of residents from each census tract in California went to the hospital. Staff combined census tracts that went to the same city for hospital care, and combined cities that were within commute distance of each other to create the custom geographies. These geographies divide California into 72 custom areas, named after the two most populous census places within each boundary.

Results

The updated methodology designates 58 of 72 areas as RNSAs. Table 1 summarizes the designations by severity and population:

Table 1.

RNSA	Number of Areas	Population	Percent of California Population
No	14	9,857,409	25%
Yes - Low	20	19,799,189	51%
Yes - Medium	19	5,290,753	14%
Yes - High	19	4,201,409	11%

Table 2 lists every custom area and its designation status, sorted geographically from north to south:
